e. [redacted] the 110 medical and dental officers were assigned to Polish army and air force units. [redacted]

25X1

f. [redacted] on the system of selecting medical doctors for military service. [redacted] 25X1

[redacted] the following:

The Polish Army needed an unlimited number of medical doctors to serve in a career status. Possibly the personnel department of the Ministry of Health was responsible for obtaining the names of medical doctors available for military service. Consequently, each city, district, and provincial Department of Health, all subordinate to the Ministry of Health, compiled lists of medical doctors and dentists in their respective areas who were available and whose induction into the Polish Army would not seriously reduce the medical care required for the area and population. Normally, young medical doctors and dentists (those who had recently completed their medical and/or dental training and had not established a practice or were not connected with a hospital or clinic) were included on the lists.

These compiled lists of available doctors and dentists were forwarded to the Ministry of Health and subsequently to the Military Bureau, which was located in the Ministry of Health and fulfilled a liaison mission between the Ministries of Health and Defense. The Ministry of Defense approved the compiled lists and forwarded the names of doctors and dentists to the appropriate regional induction commissions to effect the inductions.

[redacted] a Polish medical doctor, Col. KOWALSKI, formerly the Chief of the Medical Service of the First Military District at Warsaw, as being the head of the Military Bureau in the Ministry of Health. During 1952, Col. KOWALSKI replaced Col. BIELICKI, who was assigned to the Air Force Medical Service. 25X1

g. [redacted] induction was a means being used by unscrupulous doctors and Party members to remove doctors who were troublesome and disliked by Party officials. As an example [redacted] a Dr. JURASZYNSKI, [redacted] was inducted into the service as a result of his denunciatory speeches against the practice of illegal abortions, a practice which netted many doctors a profitable income. 25X1

9. Length of Service:

[redacted] the required length of service for EM. [redacted] they were required to serve approximately two years. [redacted] a number of active duty NCOs had been retained for an additional year of service because they were needed. [redacted] Career EM could serve as long as they desired providing they were physically fit. There was a retirement policy in effect but [redacted] retirement was based upon the age of the career EM and not on the length of service. [redacted]

10. Reserve Training:

[redacted] information on annual reserve training of officers and EM. During 1951, two Polish officer patients [redacted] had been called for reserve training for a period of three months at Dzialdowo (N 53-14, E 20-11). [redacted] they had received the same kind of training as EM, and [redacted] during their training they were considered as officers but without officer rank. This was the first time that these officers had been called for reserve training since their separation from the service at the end of World War II.

[redacted] two women doctors, Dr. Halina WARDASZKO and a Dr. KONSTEDTER, [redacted] had attended a military medical course at Srem during July 1953. The course lasted one month. Another course was conducted during August 1953 for women doctors. [redacted]

[redacted] These two women doctors were commissioned as lieutenants upon completion of the course and returned to civilian status.

12. Polish Organizations:

[redacted] Trade Union for Workers of the Health Service. Membership was open to all persons in the medical field, workers in clinics, hospitals, and health departments. This organization did not conduct any pre-military training nor select personnel for OCS training or as NCOs in the service. General and special meetings were held frequently during the month. Occasionally speeches of a political nature were made by some members of the union but generally the meetings were taken up with discussions on the collection of dues, the lack of workers in hospitals and clinics, the lack of housing near the hospital for the workers, the lack of hospital equipment, and other similar needs of the union members. Political lectures were usually conducted during the evening and lasted several hours. [redacted]
